Urban Design

People are at the centre of all good urban design. An understanding of people and the physical geography of an area is vital as places must be dynamic, comfortable and sustainable. Whether it is a new residential estate, an urban redevelopment, a town centre or a main street, our urban designers have the ability to draw upon their years of experience to create vibrant and stimulating places.

We fervently believe a strong amalgam exists between the sociological, economic, environmental and design aspects of planning. In accordance with this, the outcomes of our projects reflect the multi-discipline skills and input of our team who have each developed a clear understanding of the relationship between people and the urban fabric. This is reflected in every project we undertake.

As one of Australia's leading multi disciplinary urban design firms we attract a local, national and international client base drawn from both the public and private sector. Our recognised strength is the ability to work with large stakeholder groups to produce design outcomes that are sustainable in the long-term and which reflect the aspirations of those groups participating in the design process.
